

JK Sooths McCone's Way

President Kennedy took action today to allay congressional concern over the scope of the Central Intelligence Agency and smooth the way for confirmation of John A. McCone as its new director. The President sent a memorandum to Senate Armed Services committee reporting that he has directed Mr. McCone to maintain a constant review of all U. S. intelligence activities. Mr. McCone's nomination was expected to win approval but the hearings on his confirmation were expected to air proposals for setting up a congressional watchdog committee over the super-secret agency.
